Shah Rukh Khan's Swades had just released in 2004, when Rohit Gupta, who was on the cusp of choosing a life path, would pick up the camera, don check shirts inspired by SRK's character Mohan Bhargav, and go meet villagers in Delhi's outskirts in a bid to go back to one's roots and meet people whom the city boy otherwise would not have crossed paths with. Years later, he'd do the same but in the north-east state of Nagaland.

Rohit Gupta, the co-maker of The Creative Indians docu-series has made a music documentary film on the Naga tribes, who were once headhunters and have been making music as a way of healing from a bloody past. Music genius AR Rahman has produced this film, Headhunting to Beatboxing, which he announced at the 2024 Cannes Film Festival in May. "Cannes was a great opportunity to unveil and release the trailer and poster of the film and connect with a diverse audience," says Rohit. The film is now ready for its world premiere at the Indian Film Festival of Melbourne (IFFM), Australia, from August 15-25, where it will compete for the Best Documentary category.

AR Rahman launched the film's poster and trailer at Cannes, along with Rohit Gupta (extreme left) among others.

Meet

Rohit grew up in Lucknow but, to professionally pursue cricket, he moved to Delhi in 1998, where the Sardar Patel Vidyalaya student played for Delhi School Nationals and captained the Railways U-19 Cricket team, for whom he'd also design the track suits and arrange video recordings for team practice. But cricket took a backseat once his photography landed the English Literature student from Delhi University a job with a news magazine in 2008-09.
